American Association of Tissue Banks Recognizes Medical Shipping Company For Service

Aug 12, 2015, 08:45 ET from ShipCritical (<http://www.prnewswire.com/news/shipcritical>)

NAPLES, Fla., Aug. 12, 2015 /PRNewswire/ -- The importance of selecting the right provider for tissue and medical shipping (<http://shipcritical.com/medicalshipping/>) needs cannot be understated, and for years, many organizations have relied on ShipCritical to be that provider. The company was just accepted by the American Association of Tissue Banks (AATB), though, giving it the credentials necessary to gain many more customers in the future.

A Long History of Service

ShipCritical (<http://shipcritical.com/medicalshipping/>) has long been working to provide the high level of service necessary to tissue banks & healthcare facilities across the U.S. With decades of experience in logistical support for some of the most critical deliveries

(<http://shipcritical.com/medicalshipping/>) in the world, the company continually strives to reach perfection with every single shipment, and this new recognition only serves as proof that their efforts are working.

"For years now, I have built our organization around the best practices and ideals set forth by the AATB and our member tissue bank professionals. I am proud that Airways ShipCritical is now officially an AATB Affiliate Member," said Joe Pavone, President of ShipCritical.

The Importance of the AATB

The AATB sets standards for tissue banks across North America. They also inspect the facilities and issue accreditations for these facilities. The most respected organization in the U.S., there are 1000 individual members, and they distribute the materials for more than a million tissue transplants in the U.S. each year. This level of recognition is only given to the best in the industry, and ShipCritical is the first to achieve this goal.

"Airways ShipCritical will continue to improve our tissue transportation (<http://shipcritical.com/medicalshipping/>) systems, even from this point forward. We consider the intent of the donor as a guide for providing tight control of this precious cargo and delivering on time with our staff of tissue transport (<http://shipcritical.com/medicalshipping/>) professionals," Pavone said.

Thanks to the new credentials, ShipCritical will now have far more opportunities to demonstrate that continued commitment to excellence.
